Cordlife gets world recognition

Singapore firm Cordlife, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Australia-listed CyGenics, has been accredited by AABB. AABB accreditation is a globally recognised standard for all operating cord blood banks. Only 35 private and public cord blood banks around the world have achieved this standard. Having an AABB accreditation means that a sample has been collected, tested, processed and stored in a way that is 'consistent with enhancing the chances of a successful transplant'.
